Fall Harvest celebration

Mr. Jones' Grade 8 Ojibway class from Robert Moore School depict a much different picture of students on the grounds of the former residential school.

Jadyn Bump helped erect the poles to construct a teepee with Mrs. Miller and Ron Berezow.

Catch of the Day! – Bill Perrault gave a "little biology lesson" on the various species of fish he caught including whitefish, tullibee, walleye and sucker.

Mookii Morrison from Rainy River First Nations shares stories as the children pick the husks from the wild rice.

Florence Yerxa (Couchiching First Nation) and Lorraine Smith (Naicatchewenin First Nation) help make the fry bread.

Dorothy Medicine of Rainy River First Nations showed the kids how fry bread is made and then shared the finished product.

Mark Sault teaches about the process to make corn soup using white corn.

Children checked out the goose being plucked to make goose soup.

Luke White from Mrs. Andy's Ojibway class at J.W. Walker School tried his hand at wood sawing at the Anishinabe games station. "It's not as easy as I thought", he said.

Seven Generations Education Institute celebrated Fall Harvest and invited students from across the district to participate in educational activities with Elders.

There were fifteen groups of students rotating through fifteen stations ranging from teepee building to goose plucking and the making of bear grease.

Bear grease is used as a medicine for ailments such as eczema and arthritis explained Rita Johnson, an elder from Naicatchewenin First Nation.

As the kids went through the stations, they learned about making bannock with Dorothy Medicine from Rainy River First Nations. They learned about roasting wild rice with Willie Yerxa from Couchiching First Nation. Then Tommy Councillor from Naicatchewenin helped lace up moccasins so the kids could dance on the rice to loosen the husk. Before beginning to winnow the rice, the kids received a lesson on respecting nature. "Trees are like people", explained the elder from Seine River First Nation through an interpreter. "When you break branches on trees, you are hurting them. Respect trees, just like people. There are all kinds of trees and all kinds of people". As the kids continued to process the wild rice, they heard stories from Mookii

Mark Sault and Fred King were making corn soup and popped rice for the kids to try as well as Labrador tea.

There were teachings about traditional drumming and a couple new activities this year were the Metis Voyageur Games and the Anishinabe Games where kids could be seen laughing and having fun in some friendly competition.

"The games teach balance, body strengthening and teamwork", explained Wanda Botsford who helped organize the Metis Voyageur Games.

Wayne Anderson of Seven Generations Education Institute explained that although they have lost some elders this year, others are stepping up to the plate.

"That is awesome", he said. Some elders were giving biology classes around fish species and science lessons using the insides of a goose.

"Eat healthy for a healthy heart", advised Nancy Jones, an elder from Lac la Croix First Nation.

"Geese are vegetarians. They eat plants on clean ground so the goose is healthy. It is like eating medicine when you eat the animals, like beaver or goose".

The kids entered a teepee to participate in storytelling and singing with Laura Horton using rattles and hand drums.

As I wandered the grounds at the NANICOST building and heard the children laughing and learning about the Anishinabe culture, I couldn't help but be taken back to a time when on these very same grounds and within the building, educators were stripping away the culture that was now being celebrated.

Kudos to Seven Generations Education Institute for your vision and courage to utilize the same building that housed a residential school to provide culturally-based education to native and non-native students. The school works in partnership with main stream education although not at the cost of giving up cultural learning and traditional values passed down from generation to generation. This mutual respect for learning is a model that is working. It was achieved by going back and looking at what didn't work and asking the right questions to move forward.

Signing Ceremony with New Gold, the Rainy River First Nations and Naicatchewenin First Nation

In the spirit of partnership and mutual cooperation, the leaders of New Gold Inc., the Rainy River First Nations and Naicatchewenin First Nation came together today to formally solidify an Impact Benefits Agreement (the "Agreement") that will see all parties benefit from the development and operation of the Rainy River gold project in Northwestern Ontario.

The Agreement, signed by New Gold President and CEO Robert Gallagher, Chief Jim Leonard of Rainy River First Nations and Chief Wayne Smith of Naicatchewenin First Nation, marks an important milestone in the project's development and further solidifies New Gold's relationship with its First Nations partners. The Agreement commits New Gold to work together in partnership with the Rainy River First Nations and Naicatchewenin First Nation to ensure their communities and members benefit from employment, training, contracting and other opportunities that result from the project in their traditional territory. Beyond these commitments, the Agreement also embraces commitments related to environmental and sustainable development.

"For New Gold, having the support and participation of the Rainy River First Nations and Naicatchewenin First Nation is key to making the development of the Rainy River project a great success," stated Mr. Gallagher. "Entering into this Agreement demonstrates our commitment to developing mutually beneficial and cooperative relationships and we are excited to formalize this partnership today."

"On behalf of the Rainy River First Nations, we are proud to be a signatory to this Agreement. As First Nations members, we can determine our future and prepare a path that will bring prosperity and progress," stated Chief Leonard. "This Agreement not only incorporates our community's beliefs, but the values that are held by New Gold."

Chief Smith added, "Naicatchewenin First Nation recognizes the historic importance of this Agreement. We enter into the day with a new partner to build a project that engages our communities, not only from a business standpoint, but also on the environmental side. New Gold is committed to what's important to all of us - sustainable development that provides opportunities."

The signing ceremony was held at the Naicatchewenin First Nation.

To the editor

Dear Editor:

As election time draws nearer, I thought it might be a good time to remind everyone to only vote for the councillors you actually want on Town Council. We have an option to vote for six people, but that doesn't mean you have to vote for all six. Ensure that your vote counts for your preferred choices and only choose the person(s) you really know and support. Most importantly, fill out your ballot and return it on time.

Good luck to all candidates.
Respectfully,
Diane Maxey

Legion Chat

Kudos to the volunteers who shingled the Legion garage. Good job people.

This Friday we will be serving wings during the meat draw.

This article is being written on Thanksgiving weekend and the Legion is grateful for its volunteers and members.

The Legion is eternally grateful for the members who served in all our conflicts and who gave their lives for our freedom.
